PART E

TERMS OF REFERENCE & PROJECT BRIEF

INTRODUCTION

1. The DBSA, acting through The Green Fund, is planning to establish a project preparation program for municipal wastewater treatment works (“the Program”). Key requirements and challenges for the upgrade, refurbishment and modernization of existing municipal wastewater treatment works have been identified (“the Upgrade Process”). The main objective of the Upgrade Process is to ensure that municipal wastewater treatment works are compliant with the National Water Act (in terms of final effluent quality) as well as the National Environmental Management Act (in terms of disposal of sludge). The main objective of the Program will be to ensure that bankable projects are prepared – these should be financed via a range of financing products including commercial finance, DFI Funding and grant funding. The potential role of the Green Fund in facilitating project implementation will be highlighted in the development of the Program.

PURPOSE

Appointment of a service provider for purposes of conducting specific assignments in order to assist the Green Fund in the establishment of a project preparation program for municipal wastewater treatment works.

BACKGROUND

1.1 INTRODUCTION

South Africa is a dry and arid country. This means that the national water resource is under pressure and this pressure will increase over the long term. Essentially all available surface water sources have been allocated for use ~

- 60% is used by Agriculture; and
- 25% is used by Urban Settlements.

The recent drought conditions across large parts of the country have highlighted this. A key function in the management and preservation of the national water resource is the treatment of municipal return flows. A significant portion of the municipal return flows generated in this country is of domestic origin and occurs in urban settlements (thus it concerns nearly 25% of the water resource).

In terms of the National Municipal Structures Act, each local municipality, or alternatively the relevant district municipality, is appointed as the Water Services Authority ("WSA") for the area of jurisdiction of the local municipality. As the WSA, a municipality is responsible to provide its community with potable water supply services. In fulfilling this function, the municipality (or its appointed service provider) will typically be licensed to abstract water from a local water resource, to treat the water to potable standards and to distribute this potable water to the community. As WSA, the municipality will also be responsible to provide a suitable sanitation service to its community. In areas where the sanitation service is provided through water-borne systems connected to a municipal sewer, the WSA is responsible to treat the return flows collected through the sewer-system through a suitable wastewater treatment works ("WWTW"). Treatment of sewage is regulated through a licensing system that will typically regulate the standard of the purified effluent to be discharged as well as the point of discharge of the purified effluent. In general, the rule with regard to the discharge of the purified effluent is that discharge should be to the same (local) water resource from which the water was originally abstracted. Through the licensing of water abstraction as well as the licensing of effluent treatment and discharge the National Department of Water ("NDW") is effectively empowered to manage and optimise use of the national water resource.

In recent years, the decline of operating and maintenance capacity at municipalities in this country has been well documented. It is a well-known fact that under these circumstances the sewage collection and treatment function is one of the first functions that rapidly declines. Such decline clearly damages the management cycle of the national water resource as described above. It also creates significant environmental and health risks to communities through the decline of water quality in our rivers and natural water causeways as well as (street side) sewage spills etc. Examples of these have been extensively documented. Concomitant to the degradation of the quality of water in natural causeways due to poor effluent quality discharged, the cost of producing potable water from water abstracted from these causeways increases - thus placing additional financial stress on municipalities. The 'vicious circle' that is created through this interaction is clear.

Apart from declining operating and maintenance capacity, municipalities have also experienced rapid and significant cost increases in treating sewage. These cost increases are mainly as a result of the significant increase in cost of electricity experienced during the past decade (nearly 400% over the decade). Wastewater reticulation and treatment relies on electricity as a key input and is vulnerable to rising electricity prices. The Water Research Commission ("WRC") reports that the water sector is the 5th most electricity dependent industry in South Africa, together with gold mining. A further breakdown shows that wastewater treatment is by far the highest energy consumer within the water supply chain. These cost increases have put municipal budgets under significant strain and have probably accelerated the decline in the municipal wastewater treatment function noted above.

Various estimates of the funding requirement to refurbish, upgrade and re-commission municipal WWTW's across the country to address the rapid decline of and damage to the national water resource range from R200 billion to R400 billion. There is general consensus that there is not sufficient funding available through the fiscus to make even a marginal dent in this figure over the next decade. The dire consequences of this situation are clear.

The status quo around municipal wastewater treatment is cause for national concern. Institutions such as NDW, National Treasury, National Department of Cooperative Governance and even DBSA will come under pressure to assist municipalities to address the situation. The question is how to best achieve that?

1.2 POTENTIAL IMPACT OF NEW TECHNOLOGY AND GENERATION OF BIOGAS

The WRC reports that in the public sector alone, more than 950 treatment facilities treat approximately 6 550 Ml/d wastewater¹. To put this figure in context: this is nearly 10 times the current daily consumption of water of the City of Cape Town. These treatment facilities range in size from very small applications, treating less than 1 Ml/d, to facilities with significant capacity treating around 250 Ml/d. Various technologies and unit processes are available for the treatment of wastewater, ranging from biological nutrient removal to land treatment systems, commonly known as 'natural systems'.

Of the 950 treatment facilities mentioned above, about 80 are estimated to treat more than 20 Ml/day.

For plants of this capacity range, the de facto standard in the market is the Activated Sludge Process ("ASP"). A simplified diagram is presented in Figure 1 below.

¹ Guiding Principles in the Design and Operation of a Wastewater Sludge Digestion Plant with Biogas and Power Generation, WRC Report No. TT 681/16, September 2016, p7

The ASP is well understood and has been deployed successfully to treat a wide range of municipal return flows. Two key problems with this process are ~

1. In the past, use of mechanical surface aerators was popular as these devices were simpler and easier to operate and maintain than the alternative: diffused air aeration. In recent years, with the rapid rise in electricity costs this has become a significant cost issue, as these surface aerators are significantly less energy efficient than diffused air aeration. Municipalities are thus struggling with the significant and rapid rise in electricity costs for these plants.
2. A significant volume of sludge residual is produced in these plants. Disposal of sludge residual is highly problematic as it may contain traces of heavy metals, bacteria, viruses and other unwanted organic compounds. The de facto standard is disposing of sludge on landfill sites, but few of these sites meet environmental criteria/requirements and most are thus noncompliant. The WRC estimates that 50% of operating budgets and capital requirements of municipalities operating ASP plants is spent on sludge disposal.

Any modernisation drive for these plants must address these two key issues. Of these two the sludge issue is the most complicated. When it comes to dealing with municipal sludge there are basically four processing options ~

1. Anaerobic digestion;
2. Gasification;
3. Aerobic digestion; or
4. Solar drying.

Solar drying is only suitable for small works and is not an option on plants exceeding capacity of 20MI/day (the focus of this document).

Aerobic digestion is highly energy intensive and requires long retention times (thus high capital). In general, aerobic digestion is not competitive with anaerobic digestion to treat residual sludge and is not discussed further in this document.

1.3 ANAEROBIC DIGESTION

Like the ASP, Anaerobic Digestion is a biologically mediated process. Anaerobic Digestion takes place in the absence of oxygen. Sludge produced in the ASP is organic in nature and can be further broken down via Anaerobic Digestion. The by-products of the Anaerobic Digestion process are ~

1. Biogas: a methane rich mixture of methane and carbon dioxide with traces of other gases. This gas may be utilised to generate heat and electricity via a number of different configurations; and

2. Bio-solids: this is still a residual but at reduced volume and more benign than the sludge from the activated sludge process. This sludge can be dried and disposed of in a landfill, be combusted for generating heat, be gasified, or may be used in brickmaking.

1.4 GASIFICATION

Gasification is a process through which solid organic materials are combusted under a shortage of oxygen. This process produces significant heat as well as a low heat value syngas (a mixture of carbon monoxide, carbon dioxide and hydrogen plus traces of other gasses). The other by-product is a biochar, which may be readily disposed of or may even be processed further. Gasification may be used as ~

1. A secondary process (and an alternative to anaerobic digestion) to treat the sludge residual from the ASP; or
2. A tertiary process to treat the bio-solids from the Anaerobic Digestion process.

Gasification of sludge residual (either as a secondary or tertiary treatment process) has not been successfully implemented in this country – there are sites internationally that deploy this technology. This is in contrast to Anaerobic Digestion that has been deployed extensively on plants in this country. Gasification should thus not be considered as a processing design option unless a suitable technology partner can be canvassed.

1.5 COMBINED ACTIVATED SLUDGE AND ANAEROBIC DIGESTION

In an attempt to deal with the significant volumes of sludge produced and the commensurate environmental impact and disposal cost, a number of municipalities have installed anaerobic digesters on their treatment plants. A typical configuration is provided in Figure 2 below.

Some considerations around this process include ~

1. Maximum realisation of the biogas production potential may have to be done at the expense of biological treatment efficiency i.e. the removal of organics from the influent stream to the activated sludge process (which is passed to the anaerobic digester) will reduce the substrate (food) available to drive the relevant nutrient removal processes and may cause a lower standard final effluent. The upswing of the reduced organic loading is a smaller biological reactor and lower oxygen demand (energy requirement).

2. The settled solids are periodically extracted from the Primary Settling Tank in a thickened state (typically 2-4% solids concentration) and can either be thickened further (to about 6%) or passed directly to the anaerobic digester. A trade-off is always at play in terms of sludge thickening – the thicker the sludge, the smaller the downstream process unit, which must be weighed up against handling (pumping) challenges and mixing energy requirements.

3. Anaerobic digesters are normally operated at 35°C for good biogas production. As the influent sewage normally enters the digester at 14 – 20°C, it implies that energy is required to (1) heat the incoming sludge and (2) cater for heat losses of the digester structure. The biogas produced by the anaerobic process is normally used to drive a burner/boiler unit through which such energy is produced to keep the digester at the optimal temperature, or the biogas can be used in a Combined Heat and Power (CHP) process to produce electricity with the digester contents being heated by the off-gas of the combustion process. It thus follows that smaller well insulated digester units will require less heating energy due to reduced heat losses through the digester structure.

4. Another source of organic solids is the residual activated sludge that is wasted from the activated sludge process on a regular basis in order to maintain a target solids inventory in the biological process. The mass of residual sludge wasted per day is determined by the (1) organic loading, (2) the required sludge age and (3) target solids concentration of the activated sludge process.

The combined process as described above is complex to operate and is highly sensitive to changes in various operating parameters. Due to this, most municipalities have in the past abandoned operation of the anaerobic digesters and concentrated on producing final effluent within the relevant license conditions. Surplus biogas produced was often deemed “worthless” and was thus flared to the atmosphere.

The key take-aways from this discussion are ~

1. Combining the ASP and Anaerobic Digestion takes careful design of the overall system to optimise two key outputs: (i) final effluent quality and (ii) biogas volume produced. Some trade-off will always exist between these two key outputs.
2. It is critical to maximise the (market) value of the biogas produced to justify its inclusion as a key design output.
3. A combined plant will require less ASP plant capacity and aeration. Electricity efficiency may be enhanced further by utilising some modern new developments and innovations in equipment design.
4. A higher level of operating and maintenance skill is required for such a plant than what is normally associated with municipal WWTW's.

1.6 GENERATION OF ELECTRICITY USING BIOGAS

A key feature of the Anaerobic Digestion process is the generation of biogas as a by-product. As stated above, it would be a key requirement to maximise the market value of the biogas produced to justify its inclusion as a key design output. Biogas is similar to Natural Gas and may be utilised to generate electricity using "off-the-shelf" technology. There are two options in this regard ~

- Option 1: Combined Heat and Power (CHP) is produced from the biogas. This is typically achieved through an internal combustion engine that drives an electricity generator. Heat may be recovered from the exhaust gasses and may be used to: (i) heat the anaerobic digester or (ii) dry the bio solids produced. Under such an option a portion (40% to 60%) of the electricity consumption required for operation of the plant may be produced on-site. The value of the biogas produced is thus determined through the saving in electricity purchased.
- Option 2: Under an alternative project configuration, biogas produced would be stored. Electricity would then only be generated during morning and evening peaks. Under such configuration, generation capacity would be 6x to 10x larger than under Option 1. This electricity would be sold as renewable, on-demand electricity. There is a significant price differential between on-demand electricity and base load electricity. Such a project configuration would still buy-in (cheap) electricity during off-peak hours and would sell (expensive) electricity during peak hours. In spite of additional project costs (gas storage and higher generation capacity), this price arbitrage would add significant value to the value of the biogas. Under this option, digesters will be heated using bought-in (low cost) electricity power.

Renewable, on-demand, electricity as produced under Option 2 is the ideal complement to other sources of renewable energy that are largely intermittent such as solar and wind. The value of this source of renewable energy may thus enhance the financial feasibility of the typical municipal waste treatment infrastructure.

CERTIFICATE OF INDEPENDENT BID DETERMINATION

- 1 This Standard Bidding Document (SBD) must form part of all bids¹ invited.
- 2 Section 4 (1) (b) (iii) of the Competition Act No. 89 of 1998, as amended, prohibits an agreement between, or concerted practice by, firms, or a decision by an association of firms, if it is between parties in a horizontal relationship and if it involves collusive bidding (or bid rigging).² Collusive bidding is a pe se prohibition meaning that it cannot be justified under any grounds.
- 3 Treasury Regulation 16A9 prescribes that accounting officers and accounting authorities must take all reasonable steps to prevent abuse of the supply chain management system and authorizes accounting officers and accounting authorities to:
 - a. disregard the bid of any bidder if that bidder, or any of its directors have abused the institution's supply chain management system and or committed fraud or any other improper conduct in relation to such system.
 - b. cancel a contract awarded to a supplier of goods and services if the supplier committed any corrupt or fraudulent act during the bidding process or the execution of that contract.
- 4 This SBD serves as a certificate of declaration that would be used by institutions to ensure that, when bids are considered, reasonable steps are taken to prevent any form of bid-rigging.
- 5 In order to give effect to the above, the attached Certificate of Bid Determination (SBD 9) must be completed and submitted with the bid:

² Bid rigging (or collusive bidding) occurs when businesses, that would otherwise be expected to compete, secretly conspire to raise prices or lower the quality of goods and / or services for purchasers who wish to acquire goods and / or services through a bidding process. Bid rigging is, therefore, an agreement between competitors not to compete.
