•2.2. DLAB Precinct Programme Social Return of Investments

The evolution of social hubs has had significant successes and challenges. Learnings have been taken from these to create a sustainable community focused, owned and driven value proposition. The programme is looking for a framework and approach that allows the programme to efficiently and effectively capture and quantify the socio-economic value proposition. This is done by measuring the streams of investments, the outputs, outcomes and milestones.

At an organisational level, the DBSA uses the Bank's Development results reporting framework to report on the anticipated developmental outputs that infrastructure investments. The DLAB Precinct Programme adapted the Bank's framework and created a Development Results Reporting Tool (DRT) to create a tool that enables the programme to report on actual results on key outcomes and milestones in real time, on a monthly basis, reviewed quarterly and audited twice a year. The DRT has 4 (four) strategic pillars that it reports against, namely people development, employment opportunities, green economy, Inclusive local economic development, and local empowerment. As the programme accelerate and scales up on its footprint and operations, the DRT does not adequately record and demonstrate the value created by the programme.

The DLAB Precinct model is broadening the measures and attempts to monetise, to some degree, the value created to ensure that it in a manner that stakeholders and investors can identify with. SROIs are globally an emerging tool for this purpose. An exercise to determine its applicability and the design concept in the context of this programme is required.
